Zoetrope

Every film or television programme you have ever watched is a series of pictures sped up. Your brain fills in the gaps between the pictures and sees movement. A zoetrope was an early way of achieving this.

History of the zoetrope

Zoetropes were popular toys in the 19th century. William George Horner invented the modern zoetrope in 1834. It was a slotted cylinder lined with images. As it spun around, each picture was seen for a fraction of a second through a slot. If it spun fast enough, the pictures merged together and appeared to move.

You will need ...

"Black paper, pencil, ruler, safety scissors, sticky tape, white paper, black pen, paper plate, and sticky tack"

How to make it

1. To make the outer part of the zoetrope, draw the outline onto dark paper. Use a ruler to help draw straight lines.

   The slits: Along the top edge, cut vertical slits about 1 inch deep and 1/8 inch wide.

Copyright © 2026 ASMOPSS. All Rights Reserved.

Spacing: Space the slits evenly (about 1 to 2 inches apart). The more precise the spacing, the smoother the animation.

2. Cut the shape out and tape it together to make a cylindrical shape.
3. Cut a strip of white paper that, when curved, fits snugly inside the black cylinder, no taller than the slits. Draw a series of simple images, such as a stick person in slightly different poses, along the strip. Curve the strip and tape it together into a loop.
4. Find the center of the paper plate and push a pencil through it. Press some sticky tack around the pencil to hold it in place.
5. Fix tape to the bottom of the black paper loop and stick this onto the paper plate. Then slip the white loop of paper inside the black.
6. Twist the pencil between your hands to make the whole thing spin. Look through the slits to see your images move!

28. Which of the following is NOT a step in assembling the zoetrope? (2 points)

A. Drawing a stick person in various poses

B. Pushing a pencil through the center of a paper plate

C. Cutting vertical slits along the top edge of the black paper

D. Gluing the white paper strip onto the black paper strip directly

29. What is the primary function of the "slits" in a zoetrope? (3 points)

A. To allow light to illuminate the white paper strip

B. To act as a shutter that prevents the images from blurring

C. To make the cylinder lighter so that it spins faster

D. To provide a handle for the user to twist the device

30. After reading the passage about the Zoetrope, four students decided to make their own. Based on the technical principles in the text, which student's project will result in the MOST successful and smoothest animation? (5 points)

A. Nina decided to draw 12 pictures of a cat. To make sure the cat looked the same in every frame, she traced the exact same pose for all 12 images.

B. George wanted to see the pictures clearly, so he cut the slits 2 inches wide instead of 1/8 inch. He believed that wider slits would let in more light for a better view.

C. Adam used a ruler to mark the slits at exactly 1.25 inches apart all the way around the cylinder, making sure every gap was identical and precise.

D. Martin made his white paper strip 4 inches tall, which was 3 inches taller than the slits, so that he could draw very large and detailed characters.
